HAMILTON FACES GRIM PROSPECT OF DEATH IN CHAIR

Notorious Bandit is Rushed to Dallas from Fort Worth After Capture

BACK TO DEATH HOUSE

Desperado Had Two Pistols But Had No Chance To Shoot

DALLAS, Tex., Apr. 6—(INS)—Trapped and captured before he could draw a gun, Raymond Hamilton, notorious No. 1 Desperado of the South, today faced the grim prospect of execution in the electric chair.

Hamilton, rushed here from Fort Worth where he was seized in a railroad yard, was locked up in a cell at the county jail. Guards were posted about the outlaw's cell to prevent any attempt at escape.

Sheriff Smoot Schmidt said Hamilton will be returned as quickly as possible to the death house at Huntsville State Prison whence he escaped in a spectacular break while awaiting execution for the murder of a prison guard in another escape.

Surrounded by Sheriff Schmidt and a squad of officers in the Rock Island railroad yards at Fort Worth last night, Hamilton quickly surrendered with the words:

"I'm caught—come and get me."

Although armed with two pistols the desperado had no oportunity to use them. Two companions of the outlaw, who gave their names as Chester Regan and Glenn Allen, likewise surrendered.

Suspected of being a friend of Hamilton, Bolan Alred, 19, of Mississippi, was arrested here yesterday and under questioning he revealed that he had an appointment to meet the desperado in the Fort Worth yards. The officers took Alred to the appointed place as a decoy last night and Hamilton walked into the trap.

Hamilton and the other prisoners were manacled and placed in automobiles which sped them here to the jail.

Capture of the widely-hunted outlaw, former lieutenant of the late desperado Clyde Barrow, ended a wild career of bank robberies, shootings and kidnapings in which Hamilton narrowly eluded capture a dozen or more times in the several months he was at liberty.

His most recent escapade took Hamilton and several accomplices on a whirlwind tour of terror through southern Mississisppi in which seven persons were kidnaped after he and four companions robbed the Prentiss, Miss., bank of $1,100.

The desperado, when hustled into the jail here last night, attempted a display of nonchalance that quickly faded when he was locked in a cell. He shook hands and joked feebly with a few officers and reporters in the jail corridor and then lapsed into sullen silence.

Morrisville Youth Gets Homesick and Returns

Pittsburgh, Apr. 6—Tired, but determined, four youths yearning for the life of a Texas cowboy, headed westward today while one home-sick companion returned to his family in Morrisville.

Given a place to sleep by West Homestead police last night, the youths told how they deserted home to find work. Disgusted, the five found themselves in a freight car as it rolled out of Harrisburg. Suddenly Jack Holt, 21, of El Paso, Texas, suggested that all accompany him to his father's ranch near El Paso. There they could try their hands at cow punching and be sure of "three squares" a day. All agreed, but when they reached Pittsburgh, Joseph Galambo, 16, longed for his family, and decided to return to his Morrisville home. Holt and the others, who are Beryl Charles, 20, Chicago, Jack Stevenski, 20, Wilkes-Barre, and Frank Kilek, 21, Luzerne County, are headed westward.

LIFETIME WOULD NOT EXHAUST PA. WONDERS

Sportsmen's Paradise Has Streams and Woodlands In Great Number

THOUSANDS ENJOY TRIPS

Thousands of words have been written of the beauties of Switzerland, the glories of Yellowstone Park and the rugged grandeur of the Canadian Rockies, but little has been told of the combination of all three qualities right here at home in Pennsylvania.

In an effort to stimulate interest in Pennsylvania, Warren Van Dyke, Secretary of the Department of Highways, has had prepared a series of articles for publication in State newspapers stressing the wonders of Pennsylvania and the excellent highway facilities the State has developed for the traveling public.

The Courier will from time to time this summer present articles prepared by the Department of Highways and designed to sell Pennsylvania to Pennsylvanians. Photographs taken by Department of Highways camera men will illustrate the articles.

HARRISBURG, Apr. 6—It has been written that a lifetime would not exhaust the wonders encountered in a tour of Pennsylvania, but few of us have either the time or inclination to devote to a continuous exploration of our native State. It is necessary for most people to utilize leisure time judiciously and crowd into brief periods the choicest tours the Keystone State offers.

For the week-end motorist as well as the person who desires to discover Pennsylvania on a longer vacation tour, this series of "See Pennsylvania" articles is designed. An effort has been made to select from the vast storehouse of interesting subjects which this great Commonwealth offers, a program which will meet all tastes, whether one desires to dip deep into historical lore, which is Pennsylvania's great heritage, to obey the urge to get back to nature in one of the camp sites or forests set aside by the State for the recreation of its populace or to explore metropolitan areas and industrial towns which have made Pennsylvania the workshop of the world.

Not only on the famous highways which crisscross the State, but also on the gigantic system of modern roads will adventure and romance be found in bounteous plenty.

A sportsman's paradise, with streams abounding in fish of all descriptions and with forests stocked with game of all varieties—Pennsylvania offers year 'round diversion for its native sons.

Sparkling lakes, hundreds of them dot valleys and mountains of the State, historic shrines hallowed by the blood of heroes, are discovered in all parts of the Commonwealth, cared for by the government and cherished by thousands who journey to them.

Eddie Thompson was held in $500 bail for court last night after a hearing before Justice of Peace, James Guy. Thompson was charged with using a knife to good effect on the head of Arthur Enlins. Both men are colored.

The fight, it is alleged, took place at 216 Washington street, on the night of April 1st, but it was not an April fool prank.

As Thompson went after Enlins, the latter grabbed a baseball bat and used it quite effectively on the head of Thompson. Both men were considerably battered up.

TRENTON TO PROTEST DAMMING OF RIVER

Danger of Flood is Pointed Out In Plans for Ship Canal

DON'T OPPOSE CANAL

TRENTON, N. J., Apr. 6—Fearing that the City of Trenton may suffer irreparable damage if the proposed New Jersey ship canal dam is constructed at Bordentown, the City Commission yesterday authorized Commissioner Abram Swan to argue the city's official protest at a public hearing in Washington, April 16th. Armed with engineering data, some of which he laid before the commission yesterday, Mr. Swan will appeal to the War Department Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for a reconsideration of its plans.

It was made clear at yesterday's meeting that the city will in no way protest against the construction of the ship canal. Its attack will be against the scheme for the building of the dam only.

Commissioner Swan presented a report of Louis Focht, superintendent and engineer of the Joint Toll Bridge Commission of New Jersey, which painted a drab picture of possibilities in case of a major rise of the Delaware such as visited Trenton in 1903 and early last year. The report said, among other things, that should the 1903 rise be duplicated with the river damed at Bordentown as proposed by the present ship canal plans, the water would rise to a level of four feet above the floor of the lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge.

Mr. Swan said that on the basis of Focht's engineering figures, Trenton's pumping plant at Calhoun street might be "completely put out of business," and that water might rise to the basement level of the Stacy-Trent Hotel and the State House.

SCOUT LEADERS MEET IN 3RD TRAINING FORUM

Leaders in the Lower Bucks County Group Discuss New Plans

A. OSBORNE SPEAKS

Scout leaders gathered last evening to attend the third Training Forum of the Bucks County Boy Scout Council. The men came from the lower end of Bucks County. Scouters were present from Bristol, Cornwells, Croydon, Eddington, Edgely and Langhorne. The meeting was conducted in the basement of the Bristol Presbyterian Church.

District Commissioner Arthur W. Osborne of District No. 6, Riegelsville, spoke on program planning. Mr. Osborne, using a number of charts containing the essential parts of a meeting, and how to work them into an annual program, clearly illustrated his remarks. Emphasizing the necessary motto for good meetings as being "Start, and stop on time," the whole picture of a meeting program plan was included. Leaders made copies of his presentation to perfect their present method of program planning.

"Nothing is learned until it is expressed," said Robert J. McCormick of Philadelphia, during his lecture on Scouting and Educational Objectives. Mr. McCormick is lecturer for the Philadelphia Boy Scout Council, and was loaned to the Bucks County Council to make this special presentation. "Scouting has not been handicapped by years of stated curriculum, as are the schools; it has been plastic in its aproach with a program of character building, and participating citizenship. Education, because of years of set procedure, has not been able to change as quickly with the times as it should have done. It is hard to improve educational methods with the objections coming from those claiming 'they didn't have it when they were children,'" continued Mr. McCormick. "Try to secure results by satisfying the childs' needs. The most desirable form of instruction is that in which the instructor is in the background, and serves as a guide. There is a great value in Scouting having its meetings outside.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CHAIRMAN HIRES AND FIRES HIGHWAY EMPLOYEES

Charles N. Erdman, Superintendent in County for Past Seven Years, Resigns, Because of Conditions Within the Department — Experienced Employees Dismissed and Efficiency of Department Broken Down

Charles N. Erdman, Langhorne, Superintendent of Highways in Bucks County for the past seven years and connected with the Department of Highways for the past 15 years, today resigned his position as superintendent in the following letter to the "Secretary of Highways:

Hon. Warren VanDyke,
Secretary of Highways,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:

"I hereby tender my resignation as Superintendent of Highways in Bucks County, District 6-1, effective April 15, 1935.

"I am resigning for the reason that it appears to be the policy of the Department of Highways to dismiss at once, capable and experienced employees, who, in most cases started as laborers or truck drivers and worked their way from those positions to the ones they are now holding as foremen. Many of these men have been with the Department from ten to fifteen years and have become experienced in road construction and maintenance.

"During the last ten days I have been ordered to replace these employees with men who, according to the information furnished on their applications have had little or no experience with constructing or maintaining roads or highways.

"Such a policy will break down the morale and efficiency of the highway organization in this county for which I do not care to make myself responsible."

Mr. Erdman in an interview stated that the policy of the Highway Department in the wholesale dismissal of capable and experienced foremen and the appointment of inexperienced men would demoralize the highway organization in the county.

Practically all of the foremen who have been and will be dismissed worked up to their present position from laborers over a course of many years and thereby gained a thorough knowledge of timekeeping, grading, drainage, road construction and maintenance, and supervision of labor, all essential to efficient road construction and maintenance.

The orders to Mr. Erdman to dismiss these men came from Dr. John A. Flood, the Democratic county chairman, and who recommended the persons to replace them.

Dismissals and replacements to date are as follows: Alfred R. Clee, Trevose, replaces Phineas P. Ross of Feasterville, foreman since January 1928 and prior to that time a laborer. Robert H. Godown, Doylestown, R. D., replaces Howard High of Doylestown, foreman since 1928 and prior to that time, construction boss and laborer. Frank L. Moll, Sr., of Quakertown, replaces Newberry Sell, foreman since 1930 and a highway employee since 1926. William A. Kopp, Jr., of Sellersville, replaces Harry A. Wambold of Sellersville, equipment operator from 1928 to 1932 and foreman since 1932. Robert P. McNamara of New Hope, replaces Amos A. Markley of Langhorne, a foreman with the Department since 1925, and prior to that truck driver.

Further dismissals and replacements recommended, are David P. Fabian of Fallsington to replace Charles A. Wurple of Fallsington, foreman since 1928, and prior to that laborer. Howard J. Robinson of Bristol, R. D., formerly a bricklayer and stone mason, to replace Edwin P. Darrah of Langhorne, foreman since 1923 and prior to that truck driver and laborer. John Morrell, Bristol, R. D., former salesman and now a farmer, to replace John Weidman, of Cornwells Heights, foreman since 1923 and prior to that laborer.

TELLS OF LAW PROBLEMS OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Miss Anna Hawkes, Edgely, Gives Interesting Discourse At Club Session

IN TRAVEL CLUB HOME

Travel Club women heard an interesting talk on "Law Problems of Interest to Women" yesterday afternoon when they met in the club home for the bi-weekly session. The speaker was Miss Anna Hawkes, of Edgely.

Miss Hawkes told that "The proverbial dullness of the law vanishes when we think of law as a living thing, a help in our every-day problems." She spoke of the problems of wills, strongly urging the writing of such, and pointed out the advantages and disadvantages.

The domicile interest in marriage was spoken of, and the restrictions which may be placed upon it by the state legislature; also of divorce and the necessary jurisdiction over the parties.

The remainder of the informative address was given over to discussion of problems of criminal procedure. The "third degree" was mentioned, and Miss Hawkes gave several examples of brutal questioning in an effort to break down the suspects. She offered as possible explanations facts which were first brought to her attention by the Hauptmann case. "The feeling that good triumphs over evil, that a guilty man will confess, is shared by everyone, including the cross-examiners, and is a survival of our religious concepts. The fact is however, that in many cases of the worst crimes on record the accused has gone to his death protesting his innocence. Without confession some people will not consider the man guilty, and the 'suspect' questioned knows this. This seems absurd when we recognize the fact that the person who will do the basest crime is the least apt to be human enough to ever confess his guilt." Miss Hawkes expressed the view that there would be no confession from Hauptmann.

Miss Hawkes responded to many questions, and when pressed for her view on the Hauptmann case said "The conviction was, in my mind, absolutely justified. It restored my faith in a justice which slow though it may be, is inevitable, and justice unaltered by many brightly-colored emotional biases is what the law and society must strive to attain.

The program was in charge of Mrs. Griffith L. Williams. Mrs. Charles I. Bowen sang "Open the Gates of the Temple," accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Marburg D. Weagley.

Visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Cahall, 248 Monroe street, recently, were Mr. and Mrs. William Cahall and family, Burholme, and Edward Cahall, West Philadelphia.

MORE TREE PLANTING

Tree planting has again been resumed in Bristol and nearly 150 trees are now being distributed for planting along the streets of the Borough.

Within a few years the excellent work being done by the Shade Tree Commission of Bristol will be evident as one goes through the various streets here. It will take a few years for the trees to be developed but when they do, much will have been added to the appearance of our streets and the town in general.

It has been many years, if ever, since there has been an organized movement here to plant shade trees along the streets. This old borough, many years ago, was noted for its tall and stately trees. But with the town's development our trees met with the same fate as trees in other municipalities and they were ruthlessly cut down. Only a few of those cut down were ever replaced and in many instances the old stumps were left. These stumps were unsightly and a menace to pedestrians.

Under the LWD the Shade Tree Commission had these stumps removed, dead trees cut down, and other trees topped and trimmed and the dead wood cut out and the trees properly treated by tree surgeons.

The Rotary Club donated a hundred trees and individuals contributed others and now 150 more are being planted.

An entire row of trees has been planted around the boundary of the Bristol cemetery, which in a few years will add much to the attractiveness of that plot.

Talks have been given in the schools urging the children to protect the trees and not to damage them in any respect. The children, thus far, have been a credit to themselves and they are refraining from in any way damaging the trees.

SEASON OF HOPE

Why is it that people are always more hopeful in the spring? The poet said that in spring the young man's fancy "lightly turns to thoughts of love." Not merely does he feel the mysterious call but he is more hopeful about the possibilities of marriage, and the idea of raising and maintaining a family does not seem so formidable.

So it is in other activities. People feel more hopeful about their work in the spring. They are more likely to start out on some new enterprise.

The impulses of the season affect our minds. We see the trees and plants preparing to grow, which makes us feel that we too are able to grow to better things. We see farmers putting seed in the ground, trusting to the blind forces of nature. It makes people willing to run some risks.

We need the faith and hope of the spring time, or we shall sink out of sight in our old ruts.

10c Great Smoky Stamp

For the benefit and instruction of stamp collecting enthusiasts of Bristol and vicinity, the recently-formed Bristol Stamp Club is planning a series of articles on the ten Park Issues. It is planned to have one article a week published.

This stamp was the last in the series and the last to be issued. It appeared October 8, 1934 at the two offices of Gatlinburg, Tenn., and Washington, D. C.

This stamp is vertical in arrangement its color is slate-gray and pictures Mount LeConte with much shrubbery in the foreground.

The photograph was taken by the Thompson Company for the National Park Series. From this photograph Miss Esther Richards drew the design and it was engraved by L. S. Schofield and W. B. Wells.

Both the color and the art work on this stamp bring out the misty smoky appearance of the atmosphere and landscape so characteristic of Great Smoky Mountain National Park.

The ten-cent stamp being a commonly used value, the larger number of 20,000,000 was ordered, but in this one case, the order fell short of the original order, there being exactly 19,382,000 stamps printed, when the presses stopped for the season.

Four plates were used in printing this value, number 21337, 21339, 21340 and 21342.

At Gatlinburg on the first day of issue, there were over 70,000 sold and at Washington, D. C., almost 67,000 stamps.

New Connecticut Tercentenary

April 26, 1935 has been set as the first day of sale for the new three cent Connecticut Tercentenary stamp. Hartford, Connecticut, has been designated exclusively for the first-day sales and the stamp will be available at most post offices throughout the country the following day or soon after.

The central design of the stamp will be a reproduction of the old historic Charter Oak. The stamp will be rectangular in shape and in size will conform with the current special delivery stamp.

Change Age Limit

At the last meeting of the Bristol Stamp Club, the age limit was changed to 14 or over, thereby making it posible for young collectors to meet with the senior members.

BEHIND THE SCENES AT HARRISBURG

By Robert B. Vale
(Writer for the Philadelphia Daily News)

PHILADELPHIA, April 6—Nearly 1600 men and women are being paid to distribute relief funds in Philadelphia. It costs $1 to hand $23 to the jobless. The weekly payroll of the huge machine totals more than $37,000 or over $1,924,000 a year. There are 103,000 relief cases in Philadelphia and the weekly relief bill is $850,000.

In the army of paid relief workers there are almost 500 clerks of different degrees.

It takes about 230 typists and stenographers to run the works, not to speak of statisticians, calculators and other similar workers.

And almost 650 "visitors," investigators and timekeepers are hired to see that those on relief are not driving around in automobiles or holding down jobs or have money in the bank or are getting cash that they are not entitled to.

Messengers By Dozens

There are messengers by the dozen, district supervisors, division superintendents, "expeditors," adjustors, engineers.

The highest salary paid is $115 a week, and the lowest, $17.31.

Average wage for the entire force is nearly $23 per week.

And the average disbursement is about $8 to each case on the long and increasing list of the unemployed.

Growth of relief and the machinery to administer relief is one of the almost astounding developments in Philadelphia. Starting in September, 1932, with 14,680 relief cases, the number has mounted until today there are 103,000 cases.

Judging from the relief lists alone, it would appear that conditions are eight times as bad today as they were in the fall of 1932, which is not the case.

Costs Leap

What has happened since last August supplies the most startling and most discouraging picture. At that time, a little more than six months ago, there were 70,674 relief cases in Philadelphia. Now there are more than 103,000 cases. An increase of more than 22,000.

The cost of relief last August was $2,337,933. Today it is $3,420,000 each month. That's a leap of more than $1,000,000.

And yet reports come from Washington telling how unemployment is decreasing and how much better conditions are.

There's one spectacle that would be worth walking miles to see, and that is a spellbinder going into the northeast and telling the mill workers of that great industrial section how much the NRA and the New Deal have done for them.

Blue Eagle Has Flown

Once upon a time the northeast was filled with pictures of the Blue Eagle bird. You don't find them now. They have been ripped from the windowns and torn from the walls.

Workers who were led up on a high mount and told that they were looking down upon a promised land that was theirs—all theirs—break into jeers when the NRA is mentioned.

The workers of the northeast do not like relief. They want work. They want the mills to reopen. They want to go back to the days of private enterprise. They want protection to American industries.

Not far from 2d street and Allegheny avenue there is one mill a block long and half a block deep. There are exactly four persons at work. At another mill the only living being about the place is the watchman.

Industry Going South

A truck pulled up in front of a textile plant which formerly kept several hundred men and women busy. Bales and boxes of goods were taken into the plant, for reshipment. Every yard of material was made in North Carolina.

Travel through any part of Kensington; go over to the Richmond section, swing into Frankford, and the same story is heard; the same question is asked. That question is "when will the mills open?"

Relief is not satisfying the working people of Philadelphia. It may be pleasing to those who are lazy, but the men and women of the northeast are not of that stripe.

"I own a home," said a middle-aged man who bears the same name as the federal relief administrator. "The house is paid for; from money I had saved when times were good. There was one thing I never did, and that was to put a mortgage on the place when I was out of work.

"It has been rough pulling during the past several years. Long ago my savings were eaten up. Many's the time when the family had little to eat. We have managed to get along on our stock of clothing bought in flush days. Suffering? Yes, plenty of it. But on relief? No."

Almost every other man who talks about the depression gets back to what he calls the "good times." And he will tell you that the mills of the northeast and those who worked in the mills enjoyed their greatest prosperity under high tariff.

Folks who thought that this business of protection was gone and forgotten do not know. There is more of a sentiment for a high tariff among the mill workers of the northeast than for ten years.

"THE COLD FINGER CURSE"

by EDWIN DIAL TORGERSON

SYNOPSIS

The crowd had gathered as usual at June and Jimmy Kirkman's place at Two-Sixty-Eight Waverly Place, habitat of artists and their ilk. Among them are St. Gregory Valcour, pseudo artist, Roger Duane, a specialty dancer, dignified Douglas W. Coultney, the only non-artistic person in the house, and Glenn Thurber, a newspaper reporter. They are awaiting the arrival of wealthy Mrs. Charles Elderbank, who has just purchased the house next door. Valcour says Mr. Elderbank, who is sixty-two and twenty years his wife's senior, lives in Canada and approves of her going around with a chap named Price Merriam. Jimmy notices a stranger watching the house and Valcour says "If it's a process server looking for me, I'm not here." Later Detective Stranning arrives looking for Valcour, but Jimmy shields the latter. Stranning claims there is no charge against the artist, but he is wanted for questioning. Violet Elderbank and her handsome escort, Price Merriam, arrive. Unknown to Violet, Merriam was really employed by her husband to guard her. Because of her penchant for jewelry, Elderbank feared for his wife's safety.

CHAPTER IV

Fritz Runkel, fresh down from Woodstock with applejack from Aunt Belle's, descended upon the party with a loud "Yo!" which was the signal for things to commence in earnest. He stage-managed a tableau depicting Eliza traversing the well-known ice. The principal stage property in this extravaganza was the snow, which happened to be a box of corn flakes filched from June Kirkman's kitchen. The air was full of it. June, as Eliza, was pursued across the wastes by a wire-haired fox terrier with paper bags tied on its feet. A chop bone which June dragged by a string heightened the pursuer's interest. Roger Duane, with his trousers rolled up to his knees, was required to follow somewhat irrelevantly in the semblance of Cupid, hopping on one foot and using a coat-hanger poised in front of him for a bow.

"They're all nutty," Jimmy Kirkman explained to Violet.

Fritz Runkel, who had forgotten to take off his khaki shorts upon leaving Woodstock, had borrowed an eyebrow pencil and a lipstick from one of the girls and had painted a face upon each of his knees, a comic mask registering high amusement for his right and a melancholy visage on his left knee. He made use of these in conversation, elevating his right knee when a remark amused him, and presenting his sour-faced left one when oppositely stirred.

"I imagine I need another highball," suggested Violet Elderbank, "to enjoy this to its fullest."

There was a rush for the ingredients, and a small goldfish was dispossessed of its bowl in order that the rich visitor might have a noble vessel to drink from. Fritz Runkel, not being able to find a handy container for the protesting fish, placed it pencilwise behind his ear until it was indignantly rescued by June Kirkman.

From that point the merriment gradually rose. The company broke up into groups from which arose recurrent gusts of disputation, gales of laughter and bursts of song. The latter became endemic when Fritz Runkel produced his guitar and began singing the old English recruiting song which starts out, "One moonlight night when Mary lay a-sleeping," and ends quite beyond the pale.

Roger Duane, who had to get away well before midnight in order to be on hand for his dance at the Club O'Brien, managed nevertheless to tell Violet the story of his life.

"I was born," he related sadly, "in Port Natal, and my family for some reason or other removed inland to Eshowe. At a very early age I was kidnapped by marauding Zulu. They pretended to be friendly in that neighborhood, but they have always harbored a deep resentment against both Boer and Britisher."

"The way you told it once," Glenn Thurber reminded him, "it was the gorillas that captured you."

"No, that was a mistake. They were warriors of the Nkandhala Highlands. I remember distinctly. Gorillas do not dance and beat drums as the Zulus do's—I beg pardon—as the Zulu do."

"Were they kind to you—weren't you frightened to death?" queried Price Merriam.

"Oh, no. They were uniformly courteous, as I recall it. They kept me in their village six months. Then they took French leave one night because a military detachment was looking for me. They left me in a hut, quite intact. But they had taught me to do their dances, to beat a war drum—I have several Zulu war drums which I brought with me from South Africa. Also the authentic shields and assegais—the Zulu shorten them, you know, for stabbing purposes."

"Intensely interesting," said Merriam. "And that brings us back to the matter we were discussing the other night. Mrs. Elderbank wants you to dance for her at a party she is planning to give next door—a sort of house-warming, you know. She wants it to be very bizarre and outré. Will you dance?"

"With glee and pleasure. Any time, that is, that would not conflict with my midnight dance at the Club. I could come afterward."

"Fine," applauded Violet. "It sounds immense. We'll give the party very soon, won't we, Price?"

"Whenever you like. When shall we say? A week from now—ten days?"

"You look up our dates and fix the time."

"We could put on a Zulu ballet, couldn't we, Mr. Duane?" suggested Merriam. "But, no—that would be too much work. We'll just have an orchestra attired in Zulu war dress, with the right kind of drums—you could coach them, couldn't you?"

"Surely," said Roger. "And I have an idea for a trick entrance I have always wanted to stage. How are the chimneys in your house, Mrs. Elderbank?"

"Chimneys?" exclaimed Violet.

"Yes. Have you a flue large enough for me to crawl down?"

"At last!" said Violet, laughing. "I've met you. You're Santa Claus, aren't you?"

"I have experimented," admitted the South African gravely. "I have found, upon occasion, a flue that was large enough to crawl down, but I have never had the chance to use that means of entrance for my dance. You see, right there is the big surprise for your bizarre and outré entertainment. The musicians in war paint are giving the Zulu roll on their drums, diminuendo and distant at first, then swelling in volume. The lights are down and come up slowly—or we might have green, blue, blood-red floodlights or spots. All doors in the room are closed and everybody is wondering where I am to appear from. At the proper climactic crash on the drums, I set off a flashlight charge on the hearth and slide out of the chimney. I am all blacked up, anyhow, and it doesn't matter if I get sooty in the descent."

"By Jove!" exclaimed Price Merriam. "That oversized Yule-log fireplace in the library—I believe it could be done."

"I hope so," said Roger enthusiastically. "I'm a thin sort, you see, and a bit of a contortionist, too."

"We could have the flue cleaned, but that will hardly be necessary. We have had a fire in it only once or twice. You come over, and we'll take off the chimney-pot and measure it. Splendid idea, Mr. Duane. Don't you think so, Mr. Thurber? Mr. Coultney?"

"Bully," Glenn Thurber pronounced it.

Coultney, who had been an amused listener to the plans, echoed his approval. "It will be one stunt," he declared, "that even our most pie-eyed artists have not tried as yet. I should think it would go over with a crash."

"Then you come over to see us tomorrow, Mr. Duane," invited Violet, "and let us talk it all over. Your dance was wonderful the other night when I saw you. Couldn't we get the same musicians from the club who play for you? We could have it well after midnight—one o'clock."

"Yes, I am sure we could get some of them."

"Then it's all settled. Everybody," Violet announced to the company at large, "is invited to come to my party."

"Yo!" shouted Fritz Runkel. "Party, the lady says! Our Little Group of Serious Drinkers is urged to give eyes, ears, nose and throat!"

There was a general buzz of interest over plans for the housewarming.

"I want a typical studio blowout," declared Violet; "nothing formal, nothing prearranged but this Zulu dance of Mr. Duane's—dinner, and perhaps a few other entertainers, but everything will be informal."

St. Gregory Valcour, who had been vigilant all evening for an opening wherein he might call Mrs. Elderbank's attention to the fact that he was a painter, urged Douglas Coultney aside for a whispered conference.

"Do you think I could tell her now?" he importuned. "Do you think I could ask her if I could bring along my paintings?"

"By all means, no," answered Coultney impatiently. "For heaven's sake wait until the lady knows you well enough to remember you the second time she sees you. Perhaps you'll get a chance to talk to her at her party. I'll speak a word for you if I can do it gracefully."

"Oh, will you? Great! That will help tremendously. Say—will you look over my paintings and tell me which you like best?"

Coultney hesitated. "I don't know much about it, Valcour. I wouldn't know a Rubens from a Rubin's sandwich with Russian dressing."

"I'd really value your opinion, though, really I would. I'll tell you what I'll do—I'll pick out some of my best pictures and bring them up to your apartment. Then maybe some of your friends might see them."

Coultney shrugged. "I have no friends who would be interested, I am afraid. But I'll do what I can for you."

"Thank you—thank you a lot."

Virtually everybody was moving toward the front door with Price Merriam and Mrs. Elderbank to tell them good-bye. Discussion of the forthcoming party at Two-Sixty-Six was still in progress. A number drifted out to the sidewalk with the departing callers. Mrs. Elderbank had dismissed her car, and some of her new friends walked to her door with her.

St. Gregory Valcour, fearful lest she might forget him, was one of these. He told her good-night with conspicuous gallantry, after most of the others had returned next door. For this he was rewarded by a demonstration of Mrs. Elderbank's prowess in remembering names and faces. She bade him loudly and brightly:

"Good-night, Mr. Valcour!"

As the door closed behind Violet and Price Merriam a bulky form emerged from the shadow of the stoop of Two-Sixty-Eight and walked alongside St. Gregory Valcour.

Detective Stranning locked his arm through that of the creator of "Goldfish Surrounded by Blue."

"Pleased to meetcha, Mr. Valcour," said the detective. "We want you at headquarters. But first we'll take a look through the place you live in."

Who buys your shirts and socks?

MORE than 80% of all men's shirts, stockings, underwear, neckties and handkerchiefs are purchased by women. Why? Men prefer to have their wives and mothers do the shopping because they realize that women are better shoppers—that they have a sixth sense for qualities and values.

How do women keep themselves informed? They have formed the habit of reading the advertisements in the newspapers. And they read them regularly, whether they want to buy anything or not. Then they know exactly where to go to purchase what they need, and they know to a penny just what they will have to pay.

From the advertisements any one can learn where to buy better clothes, better foods, better household goods, better everything. Read them carefully. They have news and suggestions for you!

ST. ANN'S GRIDDERS WILL VISIT FRANKFORD AGAIN

St. Ann's A. A. will again be the main attraction of a spring football doubleheader to be played tomorrow afternoon on the Frankford Trojans' field, Frankford avenue and Devereaux street. The "Saints" will play in the wind-up affair and will have as their opponents the strong Frankford Triple X team. In the opening game, the Holmesburg Vagabonds will meet the Almond Bulldogs.

The Purple and Gold played its first spring football contest last week and to the surprise of the promotions upset all predictions by scoring a victory over the Almond Bulldogs. It was "Big Pete" Choma who won the game for the Bristolians when he pounced on a fumble beyond the Bulldogs' goal line.

Last Sunday the Triple X club battled the Holmesburg Vagabonds to a scoreless tie. The Frankford team was in a position to score on several occasions but always went up against the Vagabands' stonewall when threatening. In the backfield of the Green and Black will be the fast "Bill" Baurer and Al Zaron. These youths carried the bulk of the burden for the Triple X all throughout last Sunday and are members of the Magnolia A. A. club, of Philadelphia.

Coach Seneca of the St. Ann's club is undecided as to whom he will use in his starting line but is almost certain that his backfield will consist of Bornice, Pieo, Tosti and Galione.

The first game is scheduled to begin at two o'clock but the Bristolians will not see action until three-thirty o'clock.

Lifetime Would Not Exhaust Pa. Wonders

through wilderness, link the sixty-seven counties of the Commonwealth to form one of the greatest highway systems of a modern day.

One need not be a millionaire to enjoy a trip through the 1,500,000 acres of State forests. Covering more than one-tenth the entire area of Pennsylvania, these sylvan retreats are scattered through thirty-four counties and easily accessible to any urban section.

In them nature has provided under the open sky the finest recreational setting found on the globe.

"Roughing it de luxe" is a favorite pastime for many city dwellers who yearn for the wide open spaces, but who have neither time nor money to seek relaxation far from home. In a journey through the State forests, which can be reached on splendid highways in a few hours, there is no need to prepare for a long stay. A quick easy jaunt—back the same day, the next day or next week—all according to taste.

Fifty State camps are open the year 'round to any traveler who wishes to use them. Nine State forest monuments, enduring memorials to noted Pennsylvanians and nine State forest parks, all along, or close to hard surfaced State highways, are found within the boundaries of Pennsylvania.

In each recreational preserve shelters for preparing meals have been provided. The State even prepares the wood, ready cut, awaiting kindling. Pure water, regularly tested by State health authorities, is available.

Rustic benches, practical bridges, swings for children, tables for picnic lunches, trails to encourage healthful walking and exploration trips, all these are provided. The woodsman from the city needs but a frying pan, a coffee pot, a few other utensils, an appetite, the necessary food, and nothing more to spend an enjoyable day in a State forest.

If a permanent camp for a week or more is desired, a State forest ranger will assist in picking a site, arrange for the moderate rental fee and you are free to build your own cabin for as long as you please.

"Back to nature" can become a reality for thousands of Pennsylvanians by use of the hundreds of State roads and forests, placed at their disposal by the Commonwealth.

The Pennsylvania Department of Highways, Tourist Bureau, of the Pennsylvania Department of Forests and Waters, Information Bureau, both at Harrisburg, will gladly supply maps and information, plan itineraries, or otherwise aid prospective visitors to the State forest. A postal card will bring a prompt reply.

and in a natural setting."

During a discussion period that followed the two addresses several important conclusions were reached: "Scouting has individualized instruction," "With a natural set-up children learn more quicker, and easier," "The instruction is in the hands of a devoted volunteer who as a volunteer is more willing to give needed time to the growth of the individual," and "Scouting wisely uses the play method of education."

Scout Executive William F. Livermore outlined the many activities that will be a part of Scouting Day. The program will include: 2.00-5.30, Appearance Contest, and Exhibition Drill; 3.00-5.30, Scoutcraft, and Bugling Championship; 5.15, Movies at the Plaza Theatre; 5.30, Camp Honor Brotherhood Dinner; 6.30, Cocoa at the Evangelical Church; and the monster Eighth Birthday Rally at the Perkasie-Sellersville High School Auditorium. Mr. Livermore concluded his period by outlining the plans for the Bucks County Council participation in the 25th National Council Jamboree at Washington, D. C.

The training forum closed with the circle ceremony of the Scout Oath, and Law.

Loaded for Baer

By BURNLEY

With that intensely persistent determination so characteristic of the Teutonic races, Herr Max Schmeling is slowly but surely punching his way back to the heavyweight heights he occupied before Mad Maximilian Baer smashed him into temporary fistic oblivion two years ago.

The dark-visaged dynamiter from Hamburg was relegated to the pugilistic scrap-heap by the experts, when, slow and punchless, he was badly beaten by Steve Hamas and could get no better than a draw with the antiquated Paulino Uzcudum. It seemed as if the Baer knockout had completely destroyed Schmeling's morale, and the "I told you so" boys were already echoing the time-honored chant, "They never come back."

But Max Schmeling did come back. Even if he never regains his old laurels from the Happy Harlequin of Hollywood, it must still be said that the German bomber has already staged one of the most remarkable comebacks on record.

With an amazing suddenness, almost like a Jekyll and Hyde transformation, Schmeling changed from the plodding, ineffective mauler of the Baer and first Hamas fights into the sharpshooting, heavy-handed batterer he was of old.

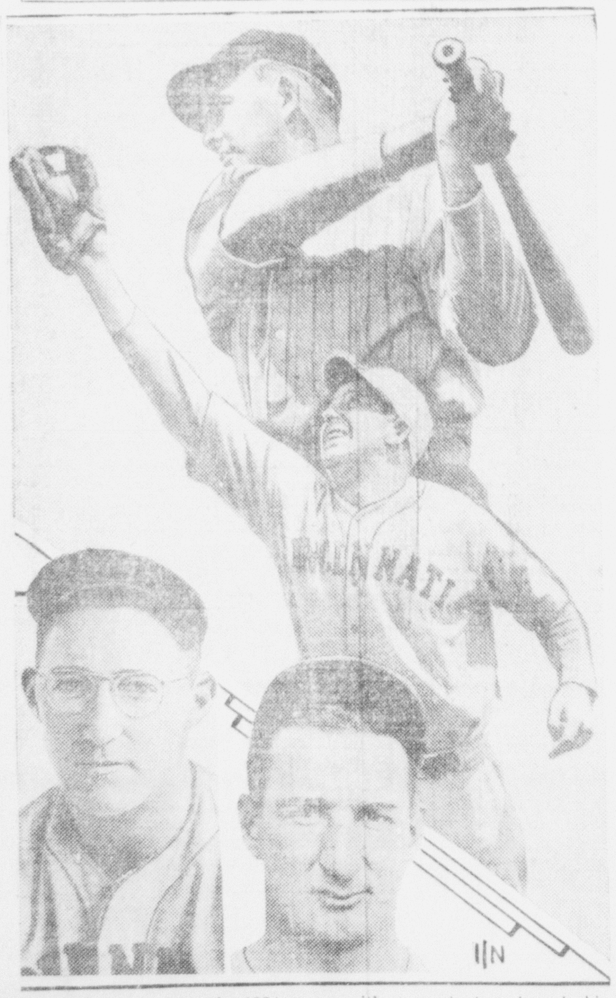

Herr Moxie's knockout of the rough, tough Walter Neusel last Summer should have been a warning to Charlie Harvey to leave well enough alone. His man Hamas had nothing to gain (except 25 grand, which, of course, is something) and everything to lose by taking on the German again, and most of the wiseacres agreed that Harvey was making a bad blunder when the mat 'h was first signed.

They were right. Poor Steve Hamas didn't have a chance in the world against the cool, merciless fighting machine that was Max Schmeling in that Hamburg ring three weeks ago. The erstwhile Penn State collegian received such a fierce beating about the head that he was partially paralyzed for more than a week after the debacle.

The formidable efficiency with which Schmeling battered both Neusel and Hamas senseless means that our daffy friend Baer will have a fight on his hands if he crosses gloves with his former victim next Summer. Schmeling at his best is likely to be more than a match for any poorly conditioned playboy.

What Is *NU-ENAMEL

NU-ENAMEL is compounded under a private formula prepared after years of extensive research. Its base is an Oriental oil, a product extracted from the fruit or nuts of a tree growing in China. For centuries the ancient Chinese have used this oil with amazing results for protecting exposed surfaces. The sacred idols of the temples and other precious wood-carvings are shielded from decay, as well as boats and bridges. World famous research chemists have long attempted to use this Oriental oil as a base for enamel and paint. NU-ENAMEL succeeded, and, as a result, NU-ENAMEL possesses many distinctive features not found in ordinary enamel: (1) Can be applied over old paint. (2) One coat is all that is required. (3) Leaves no brush marks. (4) No unpleasant odors. (5) Dries quickly. (6) Makes hard, glassy finish. (7) Easily cleaned. (8) Colors remain sharp.

*NU-ENAMEL—This trade-mark is copyrighted in the United States and in all principal foreign countries.

(1) One Coat Covers. (2) Leaves no brush marks. (3) Goes over old paint. (4) Quick to dry. (5) Will not check or peel. (6) Colors remain sharp. And many other outstanding features.

Every day thousands of people throughout the United States, who never before have painted an automobile, are now painting their cars with NU-ENAMEL. Every user becomes a booster.
